SEVENTEENTH CENTURY HEARTH MONEY ROLLS WITH FULL TRANSCRIPT RELATING TO COUNTY SLIGO

INTRODUCTION

The Hearth Money Act of 1662 was one of those passed by the Irish Parliament soon after it had been reconstituted following the Restoration. The text of the act is printed in full in pages 5 to 12 infra, together with the official summary of the amending act of 1665. As a method of taxation it remained in force in Ireland, at least in a modified form, till the Union, though the unpopularity of a similar act in England resulted in its repeal in that country in 1689. An excellent summary by Charles McNeill of the Hearth Money Acts and their application to this country will be found in the Journal of the County Louth Archaeological Society, Vol. VI, p. 79 seq.

None of the original rolls has been preserved, but copies exist in a more or less complete form for a number of counties, particulars of which are given below (see pp. 3 and 4). These copies differ in value: some, notably that for Co. Tipperary—the only one from Munster which survives—were obviously carelessly transcribed.¹ This criticism is to some extent applicable to the Co. Sligo hearth money roll.

It is indeed fortunate that the Cooper family of Markree, Co. Sligo, preserved a copy of the roll for that county, for there is no other extant for Connacht (since the disastrous destruction of the Four Courts in 1922) except a few extracts relating to the family of Ganly, now in the Public Record Office. The Cooper manuscript collection was acquired by the National Library in 1948; the manuscript now under consideration is NL. MS. 2165.

The transcriber has made many obvious errors in transcribing place-names; and his—or from the handwriting I surmise that I should say her—apparent lack of local knowledge leads, for example, to the passing over the name of a parish as “illegible”, though the accompanying list of townlands comprised in it should have made its identification simple. Such obvious defects have now been rectified. Nothing, however, could be done to supply complete omissions of names which occur in a few places and are indicated by the transcriber as due to the original being there illegible or defaced.

Some of my identifications, though probable, are not certain: I have placed a question mark after these. Most of the doubtful cases are dealt with in footnotes. Apart from those so indicated, of the 433 denominations referred to below there are 23 which I am unable to identify.

The original is arranged under parishes, sub-divided into townlands or other sub-denominations, each of the latter being followed by the names of the residents therein. Very few householders were assessed with more than one hearth. Where two or more are recorded this fact is indicated in the text now presented. As will be seen from the wording of the act some of the poorer people were exempted from the first, though it is clear that these acts gave rise to abuses, particularly during the period that the collection of the tax was farmed out. In this connexion I should draw attention to the list of relevant proclamations which was compiled, and kindly given to me, by Dr. R. C. Simington, see p. 15 seq.

All the 39 parishes of Co. Sligo, including the three which lie partly in adjacent counties, appear in the roll (Killadoon being treated as part of Shancough). 433 townland or similar denominations are listed, compared with 859 in the Book of Survey and Distribution and approximately 1250 present day townlands.¹ Many of the latter, of course, were formed since the seventeenth century, particularly at the time of Griffith's Valuation in the 1850's, when minor denominations were often officially classed as townlands. Nevertheless the discrepancy is surprising, even allowing for the fact that no doubt so soon after the Cromwellian upheaval many areas contained no habitation liable to the tax.

A comparison of this roll with other contemporary sources reveals several interesting facts. I take two typical parishes: in Drumcliff (which now contains 60 townlands) 28 appear in the roll—25 so far identified and 3 not, though most of these latter occur also in the 1659 "census"; in Kilmorgan the comparable figures are 22 modern, 11 in roll, 10 identified, 1 doubtful (this also occurs in the 1659 "census"). Turning now to personal names, all the six titulados listed in the "census" as resident in Kilmorgan also appear in the hearth money roll for that parish, though in some cases with strange variations of spelling, e.g. Bierast for Bycroft.²

These are English names, but the contents of the roll clearly show the overwhelming preponderance of Irish names except in a few centres such as Sligo town.

¹ Stafford's Inquisition of a generation earlier contains many denominations which do not occur in the other sources referred to.

² This is a good example of the way names become corrupted in the course of transcription—c is mistaken for e, and f and the former f for s are confused.

The variant spellings of place-names will be apparent from a glance at the last two columns of the text; some of the strangest of these, however, e.g. roclcl for rodd, are probably due to the Markree transcriber's unfamiliarity with seventeenth century handwriting.

Though not actually relevant to the hearth money rolls, it is perhaps worth mentioning here that the "census" of 1659 is incomplete for Co. Sligo: one fifth of the county, eight whole parishes—Ballynaskill, Calry, Kilcolman, Killaspughrone, Killerry, Kilmacowen, Killoran and Tawnagh—do not appear in it at all. Commentators on the "census", when drawing attention to other lacunae, do not appear to have made even the briefest reference to the omissions in Co. Sligo.

Copies of hearth Money Rolls of the 1660's are extant for the following counties:

- Tyrone, 1664 .. In P.R.O.N.I.; copy in Nat. Libr., Dublin (ms 9583-4).
- Wicklow, 1669 .. In Genealogical Office, Dublin, (ms 667); see also P.R.O.I. copy (ref. M 4909); an abbreviated copy (personal names given only for houses with more than one hearth) is printed in Jnl of the R. Soc. of Antiquaries LXI (pp. 165-178).

Very few of these are complete copies of the original rolls, though in most cases the omissions are not extensive.

There are also in the Public Record Office, Dublin, the National Library, the Genealogical Office, Dublin, and in the Public Record Office, Belfast, some extracts from hearth money rolls relating to small areas or to individual surnames made from time to time in the course of genealogical searches. Some parish histories e.g. Enniskillen Parish and Town by W. H. Dundas, give details of the roll for the particular limited area under consideration, but in any of those I have seen the information thus presented is contained in one of the returns listed above. A few contemporary subsidy rolls and poll tax lists are preserved in one or more of those repositories. There are very few full copies of hearth money rolls for the eighteenth century extant. Some particulars of all the foregoing will be found in R. J. Hayes: Manuscript sources for the history of Irish civilization.

FOOTNOTE.

The text of this Act is taken from Irish Statutes officially published in 1765. In paffing it to the printer I overlooked the fact that the eighteenth century found used the old f for s. It feems unnecessary to have the whole feven pages re-set in order to correct this.

The hearth-money does not come in owing to concealment of hearths and obstinacy of persons of quality who will not admit inspectors, the combination against distress and the connivance of magistrates. All arrears from 24 June 1665 must be paid at once to the deputies No. 770. Magistrates and officers to assist deputies. This to be proclaimed within 16 days after receipt.

801. 26 August 1669. [For assessing hearth-money where there are no hearths] Any house with no chimney or hearths to be counted as having two hearths (after 24 March 1667-8) until it has one or more fixed hearths with a chimney or chimneys (Cites Act: This clause is published that all may know).

806. 21 March 1669-70. John Stone, Samuel Richardson, Richard Bucknal and Thomas Breedon appointed collectors of hearth-money from 25 December 1668.

874. 5 February 1676-7. Certificates of exemption have been granted too freely. Special Justices of Peace are now nominated for each county who alone have the power of granting exemptions. William Hill, Sir James Shaen, Wm. Rider, Wm. Muschamp, Edward Richbill, Laurence Stanyan, John Gourney and Thomas Sheridan are commissioners for hearth-money.

925. 15 January 1682-3. Recites provisions under which exemption from hearth-money may be granted. A list of those authorized to grant exemptions. Francis E. of Longford, Lemuel Kingston, William Dickinson, Wm. Strong and Robert Bridges to be commissioners for hearth-money. All money due on hearths &c. on 10 January to be paid to them.

934. 22 August 1684. Complaints are made that some magistrates obstruct revenue officers in collecting hearth-money, excises, licences; will not punish persons who rescue distresses legally levied, and take insolvent recognizances for the appearance of those they do commit. All magistrates etc., are in future to give vigorous and hearty assistance to revenue officers on pain of disaffection.

977. 11 April 1687. Houses of less value than 8s. are exempt from hearth-money on obtaining a certificate. A list of those empowered to grant certificates to poor widows is added [See No. 1007]. The duties are to be paid to the authorized collectors. Ten days notice to be given at the house before distraint is made.

1007. 28 December 1688. Appointing commissioner for exempting from hearth tax.

1264. 7 July 1692. Arrears of hearth-money and of quit-rent due at Lady Day or Easter exonerated and discharged.

1286. 3 May 1693. Regulations for exemptions from hearth-money and list of persons entitled to grant it.

1300a. 3 March 1693--4. Concerning exemptions from hearth-money. Not found.

1306. 22 February 1694--5. A list of exemptions from hearth-money and of those entitled to grant it.

1314. 11 February, 1695--6. Owing to the absence of the persons nominated in proclamation 3 May 1653, No. 1286, no exemptions were given. 26 persons are nominated to grant exemptions.

1366. 27 June 1698. Cites proclamation 3 March 1693--4, No. 1300A. The persons entitled to grant exemptions in Antrim are added to.

1411. 29 December 1699. Recites particulars of those exempted from hearth—money. Appoints persons in every county &c. to grant exemptions, who are to be careful not to exceed the limits set down, Magistrates etc. are to assist the collectors. Duplicates of exemptions to be sent to Quarter Sessions.
