INTRODUCTION

ANCIENT maps have not been used for historical studies to the same extent as manuscripts. Their value in historical geography is, of course, beyond discussion—though they are considered as documents for the history of geography rather than for historical geography. It is only now that scholars begin to realise how useful ancient maps can be, in spite of their frequent inaccuracies, in their descriptions of many a country in bygone days. Sometimes old maps disclose the altered course of a river or the displacement of the sea-shore ; but oftener they have preserved ancient facts of human geography for us : forests now destroyed, marshes turned into grazing or tilling lands, antiquated thoroughfares, previous sites of a village or a town.

But old maps are perhaps more precious in toponomastic than in any other branch of human geography, with their wonderful variety of spelling for place-names, sometimes taken from documents now lost, sometimes noted on the spot by the surveyors who mapped the country—and in this last case, retaining antiquated pronunciations of more importance to the philologist than any modern local pronunciation, and not to be found in any other documents or records.

From this standpoint, Ireland was much favoured by Fate—because it was extensively surveyed in the middle of the XVIIth century by Sir William Petty (then Dr. William Petty) who was as much of a precursor in cartography and anthropogeography as in economics. Everybody has heard of his Down Survey and of the odd 2,000 parish maps which illustrated his work—maps which were utterly destroyed in the fires of the Dublin Custom House on the 15th of April 1711 and of the Four Courts on the 30th of June 1922. But very few people know that 214 manuscript Barony maps still remain which contain some 25,000 place-names—mostly names of townlands,and which are a splendid source of toponomastical information, until now left untapped.[1]

[1] The critical study and description of these maps, of their history and of the records and documents connected with them in official and private depositories in Ireland, England and France, are the subject of my books : La transformation de la géographie politique de l'Irlande au XVII^ème siècle dans les cartes et essais anthropogéographiques de Sir William Petty (2 vol. 8°, Paris, 1930) and Les noms de lieux irlandais dans l'oeuvre géographique de Sir William Petty (1 vol. 8°, Paris, 1930) in which all information and all the bibliographical and critical apparatus will be found. Only the conclusions of my work are resumed here, for to make a complete study would be tantamount to translating the largest part of the three volumes.

I.

Unpalatable as the Cromwellian Settlement may be, the event which was responsible for the making of the Down Survey conferred on Ireland the privilege of being in the modern world the first country mapped from direct protractions.[2]

In order to appreciate fairly the extent of the mapped area, we must remember that the Down Survey took into consideration only the forfeited lands; however the boundaries of all the baronies and of many parishes were traced, even outside the forfeited areas. Petty actually mapped: 1st, the administrative divisions in the whole of Ireland except 3 counties in Connaught, of which such a map had been previously drawn; 2nd, the townlands on about 47½% of the total area of Ireland.

The chief drawback of the Down Survey is that the area of the townlands is often inaccurate. It is fairly safe to say that, on an average, these areas are too small by 10 to 15%—a fact for which a satisfactory explanation has still to be discovered. Nevertheless, Larcom was right when he wrote:

> "We are not to estimate its (the D. S.'s) merits as a topographical work, by the precision which has been attained in modern times, nor test it by comparison with modern surveys, but with those which had gone before, and which it immediately replaced, as well as the circumstances under which it was executed, and the short time in which the whole operation was performed. . . . It would be no easy task in our own day, to accomplish in 13 months, even a traverse survey in outline, of 5,000,000 acres in small divisions, and it was immeasurably greater then." [3]

At any rate, geographers judge the D. S. to be much more than a surveyor's work; it is the work of a geographer at the dawn of modern cartography.

Only the cartographical part of Petty's work falls into the scope of these notes; it includes two series of maps: the official maps, and several sets of Barony and County maps that Petty drew for his private use.

[3] P. 346.

The official maps were parish maps, made out of the original protractions of the D. S., and skeleton barony maps intended to show the relative situation of the parishes in each barony; all of these are now destroyed, as previously stated.

The maps for Petty's private use and further studies were barony and county maps, mostly abridged from the official parish maps, but completed from some other sources. There still exists two sets of manuscript barony maps; whereas the county maps have been engraved so that their complete loss is now practically impossible.

Some maps of one of the two sets of barony maps were lost; the others are in the papers of the Lansdowne family and in the Quit Rent Office. The other set reposes in the Manuscripts Department of the French Bibliothèque Nationale. The following bibliography can be made of these diverse collections:

1.—Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris), Manuscripts, Fonds anglais, Nos. 1 & 2.—Hibernia Regnum; Cartes des Baronnies d'Irlande 214 manuscript maps in 2 vols.[1]

1a.—Vallancey copy of the previous set. (Destroyed in the Four Courts in 1922).

1b.—Photographic fac-similes of the BN maps and of the title-pages and Tables of Contents of the 2 vols. (Published by the Ordnance Survey, Southampton, 1908).

2.—Lansdowne and Irish Public Records set.

a.—Lansdowne maps: 103 manuscript maps in 5 vols. Plus 2 lost vols.: vol. I containing 10 maps and a 7th vol. of unknown composition.

b.—Irish public records manuscript maps. (From the same set.) There are still in the Quit Rent Office 14 loose maps and the copy of one Lansdowne map. 17 loose maps in the Public Record Office and 22 loose maps which came from the Auditor General's Office were burnt in the Four Courts, 1922.

3.—Headfort Collection.—Inventories, dated 1761 and 1817 mention, inter alia, 83 manuscript barony maps copied by Taylor in the XVIIth cent.; these maps were bought in 1837 from the Taylor family by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. In 1861, Hardinge had found in the Records Office presses 8 maps from this set which were destroyed in the Four Courts, 1922.

[1] According to the table of contents of Hibernia Regnum there should have been 216 barony maps in the complete set.

(B) County, Province and all-Ireland Maps.

1.—Lansdowne Maps.—Manuscript maps of all-Ireland, of 3 provinces and of 24 counties.

2.—Hiberniae Delineatio, by Sir William Petty.—An atlas engraved c. 1671–72 and published c. 1685. Second impression with a new map of Ireland, c. 1730. Privately reprinted on the original copper plates in 1875.—It includes 1 map of Ireland, 4 maps of provinces and 32 county maps.

There has never been any doubt about the origin of the barony maps: they were drawn by Petty's orders, from the parish maps; but the precise time and circumstances of their making have never been cleared up. I have shown in my Transformation de la Géographie politique de l'Irlande au XVIIème siècle that the barony maps were drawn at the same time as the official parish maps, i.e., from 1655 to 1659; the method used was to draw the barony maps of a region or of the area surveyed by one surveyor as soon as the protractions and reports for this region or area were traced. There was, of course, no other practical procedure, as such work could only be done in the offices where the cartographers were and had at hand the documents, tools and instruments indispensable for the completion of such an undertaking. Dr. Petty realized that it was a case of now or never to make his map of Ireland; and, yet later, in spite of all his efforts, he was never able to fill up the gaps.

Two sets of barony maps were drawn—parallel, so to speak, with the making of official maps. And it would be quite inaccurate to think, as it was sometimes supposed, that, of the two sets, one was the original and the other the copy; as a matter of fact, each set had a distinct aim of its own.

The first set—generally called the Lansdowne maps—was intended to be an epitome of the survey, a document for further work, and not a set of maps to be engraved. It was planned to be a full set of barony maps, containing as much of the material of the parish maps as the reduced scale would permit; to these maps were added reference sheets or terriers of the settlement. The whole work would have amounted to no less than to a compendium of the D. S., almost equal to a certified document. It was indeed treated as such several times; and the best proof of this is that 14 maps of the set (relating to adventurers' baronies) still repose in the Quit Rent Office, whilst the Auditor General's Office got and kept the barony maps of Connaught and also those of Wicklow and Carlow, two counties where the completion of the D. S. had been delayed. So that this set of barony maps may be described as an abridged copy of the D. S.

The other set of barony maps—in spite of some likeness with the first—is quite different: it is a geographical work, a collection of geographical material taken out of the D. S. maps for an atlas of barony maps of Ireland on a large scale. No terriers, no sheets of reference are appended to it. Information which is only interesting from the standpoint of the distribution of land has almost disappeared, and the more elaborate the maps are[5], the more this information is missing. This set cannot be considered merely as a set of D. S. maps; it is a geographical atlas of Ireland.

The author has treated the two sets of barony maps in quite different ways. In the Lansdowne set, the maps of the first survey (Army lands) were carefully bound in several volumes; the maps of the second survey (adventurers' lands) were left loose in portfolios, and many of them were lent to the Quit Rent Office, to the Auditor General, etc., and nobody took the trouble of getting them returned to Sir William or to his offspring.

On the contrary, the Doctor made a point of completing his atlas, now a labour of love. If a map of the best type happened to be missing the gap was filled with a map of another type. The fair copies of the baronies Trough, Monaghan, Dartree and Tiranny having probably been lost, some previous drawing was bound in the atlas; when only the original existed, (as in the case of the baronies Corcomroe, Bunratty and Moyarta) the unique map went into the atlas, which Petty, no doubt, looked upon as a collection of plates of "political anatomy."

Such is the character of the splendid set Hibernia Regnum which is in the Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris). According to its table of contents, 216 barony, 32 county and 4 province maps ought to be there—but the province and county maps were taken out and sent to the engraver's. Of the 216 barony maps, 2 only are missing: Geshill (I. 54) and Coolavin (I. 124), this last barony having probably not been surveyed. Barony maps of every description are there ; maps of every barony are there—and only there. In the BN volumes, there are 97 maps more than in the set divided between the Lansdowne Library and the Quit Rent Office. Since the official maps no longer exist, the BN atlas is the unique complete cartographical document representing, perpetuating, the mapping work of the D. S., the first map ever made from the measurement of the land of a whole country.

The coming to the French Royal Library of these two large folio albums, whose title on the back of the binding is : " Down Survey of Ireland by Sir Wm. Petty, Kt.—Baronies—Cartes des Baronnies d'Irlande," together with a copy of the Hiberniae Delineatio, is one of the most thrilling bibliographical adventures.

These three volumes were in the library of Lord Shelburne, Sir William Petty's son, and were sent away with some personal property from Ireland to London, on the ship Unité which was captured on the 22nd of February, 1707, by the French privateer Le Dée. According to orders received from the Ministre de la Marine, Pontchartrain, relating to books captured by privateers, Lord Shelburne's books were sent to the Secrétaire Général de la Marine, de Valincourt, who gave the three volumes of maps to the Bibliothèque Royale in 1709.

The inventory of the captured cargo still in the French Public Records Office ; an official correspondence relating to the disappearance of the books between 1718 and 1725 ; several useless diplomatic steps by the English ambassadors to France in the XVIIIth and XIXth centuries with a view to recovering the maps ; the mission given in 1786 by the Anglo-Irish government to Colonel Vallancey for the drawing of a fac-simile copy of the Bibliothèque Royale maps to take the place of the destroyed parish maps ; the photographing in full size of the BN maps by the English Ordnance Survey in 1907 are as many proofs of the authenticity of the document ; and a critical examination of the maps and papers connected with them in the public records offices of the interested countries thoroughly satisfies the historian on this subject. The BN barony maps are a most precious and in fact unique document and a hitherto untapped source for the historical geography of Ireland, and specially, as will be now shown, for the study of the Irish place-names in the middle of the XVIIth century.

II.

Dr. William Petty several times emphasized the importance of fixing the spelling of the place-names—in Ireland as well as in any other country. In 1671, more than ten years after the completion of the D. S., when he gave Aubrey directions to make statistics for England, he advised: "A Villare Anglicanum, sc. an account of all the Cities, Townes, Villages, great Houses, Rodes, carriages, principal Innes, and Families of England, with the Post-stages of the same." [6]

There is also a note from his hand—written at an unknown date about the making of an Irish "Villare," i.e. an index of the place-names, from the "Civil, Down, Grosse, Strafford's survey, Claymes (book), Poll-bookes, Harth-bookes, Excise bookes," with their "English names or names in English," and "by what new names each present proprietor desires to have his lands henceforth called." [7]

Now, how did Dr. Petty think it advisable to deal with the Irish place-names?

He himself told us he knew practically nothing of the Irish language, though he had an idea that some sort of group of Celtic languages existed.[8] But he supposed them to be barren according to his theory that languages which are not the tongue of a great empire are doomed to have but a small vocabulary. Like Mr. Wells in our days, he thought the destruction of the vernacular of the small nations a boon first for these nations and then for the world at large.

From the political point of view, he stands half-way between his friend Gookin who, in spite of—or rather on account of—his sympathy for Irish folk, wished for them a rapid and complete anglicisation, and Swift, who reckoned that at small expense and in a short time the Irish language could be killed.

Petty's policy for the treatment of the Irish place-names is based on these principles, and on the use of the Down Survey.

Toponomy did not originally fall within the scope of the D.S. Place-names were supposed to be accurately written in the terriers from which the surveyors got all necessary information in view of field-work. But these terriers were found most unsatisfactory and on several occasions, Petty had to complain of the expense and of the waste of time in correcting them. However, many place-names were corrected by the surveyors so that the D. S. is a distinct improvement on previous surveys in the matter of toponomy. And an ordnance of the Lord Protector and Council made the D. S. spelling of the place-names their definite and legal right spelling.[9]

Nevertheless. it was often an odd and haphazard spelling. In his Political Anatomy of Ireland, Petty wrote, not very long after the completion of the survey :

" Now all the Lands are Geometrically divided and that without abolishing the Ancient Denominations and Divisions above mentioned. So that it is yet wanting to prevent the various spelling of Names not understood, that some both comprehending the names of all publick Denominations according as they are spelled in the latest Grants, should be set out by Authority to determine the same for the time to come. And that wherethe same Land hath other Names, or hath been spelled with other Concription of Letters or Syllables, that the same be mentined with an alias. Where the publick and new authenticated Denomimations is part of a greater antiquated Denomination, that it be so expressed, as by being callad the East, West, South or North part thereof. And if the said Denominarion comprehend several obsolete or in inconsideraqle Parcels, that the same be expressed likewise

" The last Clause of the Explanatory Act, enabled Men to put new Names on their respective Lands, instead of those uncouth, unintelligible ones yet upon them. And it would not be amiss if the significant part of the Irish Names were interpreted, where they are not, or cannot be abolished." [10]

Once again, when near the end of his life, Sir William emphatically expressed the wish whose realization he had always cherished, that his great Irish geographical work might be completed, and he again mentioned what had still to be done for the place-names :

" Let the down-Survey be finished according to the Clause in the 73d. Page of the Explanatory Act, and a certain Number of Denominations be pitched upon to be only used in Public Instruments and Conveyances ; and let the Spellings of each be also ascertained and published, and withal to every Surround upon the Plotts and down-Survey be added an English Name." [11]

So it is safe to say that Petty thought of some method for the systematic transcription of the Irish place-names. He conceived such a method when working at the D.S., from 1655 to 1659 ; he formulated it clearly in 1672 in his Political Anatomy ; and in 1687, he advised using it for the completion of the D. S. He could not have been more insistent.

The basic principle of Petty's toponomastical method is a thorough anglicisation of the Irish place-names.[12] He does not suggest substituting fancy English names for traditional Irish place-names as some colonists had done ; for he was too " nasute " an observer of facts not to have noticed that most toponyms have a meaning or describe the ground or the landscape so that it would be absurd to change them according to fancy. What he wants is the translation into English of the Irish place-names.[13]

Petty took an interest (a " virtuoso's " interest) in the meaning of those Irish words which are frequent elements in the composition of the place-names. In the Southwell MS of the Political Anatomy, he wrote that he had made a small Dictionary of these names :

" Although I know almost nothing of the Irish Tongue, yet I have collected the following Words, by the composure of which one with another, the Names of most lands in Ireland are constituted, vizt.

" The Dictionary "[13]

Unluckily the dictionary is missing. But there is no doubt that Petty wanted to translate the Irish place-names into English and desired first of all to have a properly made and adequate Irish-English geographical vocabulary. Had he found it possible, Sir William would probably have organized an office for the translation of Irish place-names and for the making of an Irish " Villare."

Things being as they were in his day, he had to content himself with collecting toponyms—specially the names of townlands—as completely and accurately as possible, from legal papers and public records ; his surveyors added information obtained from countryfolk to the names from official sources. So that the D. S., the barony maps and the Hiberniae Delineatio are all together the most perfect collection of Irish place-names in the [12] Cf. in Petty's Treatise of Ireland, at the plan for a transplantation to England of the people of Ireland, a project for the anglicisation of the family names (Ed. Hull, p. 568, § 7 & 9 ; p. 577, § 1, 1°) and of the place-names (ibid., p. 568, § 8 ; p. 577, § 1, 1°).

unforfeited as in the forfeited area towards the middle of the XVIIth century.

The value of the D. S. registers for toponomastic studies cannot be overestimated ; but the maps—i.e., in our days, the still existing ones which are the BN maps (with the Lansdowne and Quit Rent Office maps) and the Hiberniae Delineatio—form a distinct document until now quite unexplored.

The geographical nomenclature in the maps comes from several sources ; the first and most abundant one is naturally the D. S. itself. But the barony maps—and even more the Hiberniae Delineatio—cover a larger area than the Down Survey, so that Petty had to look as well elsewhere for place-names. The previous surveys were of but little use, if any, for this purpose : it is easy to realize this fact by making a comparison between their spellings and those of Petty's maps ; and as the older surveys were not mapped surveys, they did not appeal very much to the cartographer.

Now, when comparing the terriers and the books of reference on the one hand with the barony and county maps on the other, it is not possible to doubt that the cartographers used some sources unknown to the scribes of the registers. There are in the registers some place-names which are not in the maps, even when there would have been plenty of space for them. But the following facts are far more conclusive : (1st), some names and aliases in the maps are missing in the terriers ; (2nd), very often the spellings in the barony maps and in the Hiberniae Delineatio cannot come from the registers spelling, whilst the various spellings of a same name in the diverse atlases are generally akin, the Hiberniae Delineatio containing conspicuous attempts to a simplified spelling based on the orthography of the barony maps.

It therefore follows that the D. S. registers and Sir William Petty's maps are, from the toponomical standpoint, two parallel sets of documents. The names of townlands, in the registers, come from old documents and from records in the Surveyor-General's office ; in the maps, if many names of townlands have a similar origin, others come from the surveyors' field-books, and give more recent forms and some awkward notations of the XVIIth century pronunciation.[11]

[11] For instance, the name of the par. Ardstraw, bar. Strabane, TO, is Ardstra in the certified copy of the register made for Edward Roberts' estate (v. Géo. pol. de l'Irl. au xvii^{ème}s, I, 313 et seq.) ; but it is Ardstragh in the BN

It is also noticeable that the names written in the field-books—sometimes taken orally from Irish folk—seem to have been altered, "corrected" in the parish maps according to the spelling found in the registers; whilst, in the barony maps, it looks as if the spelling of the original protractions had been kept—of course I have shown that these barony maps were drawn in the Survey Office as soon as the Surveyors' field-books, "plots," etc., arrived in Dublin.

The barony maps seem to have been the chief source of the county maps, i.e. of the Hiberniae Delineatio. However, other sources were certainly used, as can be seen by the differences in the spellings between the barony and the county maps. There are many other proofs that the Hiberniae Delineatio is much more than an abridgment of the barony maps. For instance, bar. Dungannon, TO., which is almost a blank in BN (II, 27) is replete with townland names in HD; bar. Massereene, A. is entirely different in BN (II, 22) and in HD; in bar. Inishowen, DG, out of 280 place-names, 162 are in both BN and HD; 104 only in HD, 14 only in BN and a particular name in this barony sometimes appears in forms as different as Knockillow in BN and Corykillow in HD.

In conclusion, Petty's barony and county maps offer the student of the toponomy of Ireland in the XVIIth century two sets of maps, the one completing the other, and both quite different from the D. S. books of reference. So that an index of the place-names of both sets, with their diverse spellings in the BN maps and in the Hiberniae Delineatio makes a most extensive repertory of the Irish toponyms in the XVIIth century, most of them different from the place-names in the D. S. registers, a collection of many spellings, some of which come from sources now lost or unknown—in fact an entirely new document, no index of the maps having ever been compiled. This index is now made and will be found herein.

map (simplified to Ardstra in HD). If the scribes often suppress a final -gh, they never add it. Then, the cartographer has taken Ardstragh in a document which was not the terrier; and it is known that the maps were traced from the original protractions which were made out of the surveyors' field-books. The Irish Ard-sraha is frequently pronounced Ard-straha in Ulster, a pronunciation which was noted Ardstragh by the surveyor, hence the spelling in the barony map.

KEY TO THE GENERAL PLAN OF THIS INDEX.

THE key-word of each entry in these Indexes is the place-name as it is spelt in the BN (Bibliothèque Nationale) maps ; but sometimes the place-name is not to be found in the BN maps, but only in the Hiberniae Delineatio, and in this case the HD spelling is the key-word.

Each article is composed as follows :—

1.—Index of Parishes.

1.—Name of the Parish : (a) form BN in roman ; (b) form HD in italics. If both the BN and the HD spellings are identical, the name is in roman and followed by an asterisk.

2.—Name of the barony and initial or symbol of the county.—For instance : " B. Clanmaurice, K." On account of the numerous spellings for a same barony in Petty's maps, the barony names are in modern spelling ; but the denominations are those of the XVIIth century ; for instance : " Lecale " and not " Lr " or " Upr Lecale," as these divisions did not exist at the time when the maps were drawn.

3.—Modern form of the parish name according to the GTI and the OS maps. This form is printed between parenthesis and is followed by the modern barony name when the parish is no longer in the same barony as in the XVIIth century.

When a parish was on several baronies, there is only one article, with the indication of the diverse baronies.

2.—Index of Townlands.

1.—Name of the townland : (a) form BN in roman ; (b) form HD in italics. If both the BN and HD spellings are identical, the name is in roman and followed by an asterisk.

2.—Name of the parish, and symbol of the county.—The name of the parish is given as in the BN map spelling, so that it can easily be found in the Index of Parishes where all particulars can be seen.

3.—The Symbols of the Counties.

It was found quite necessary to adopt some system of abbreviation for the county names, which are repeated several thousand times. Here are the symbols made according to the method which was used for the American states :[1]

A.—Antrim	K.—Kerry	Mon.—Monaghan
AM.—Armagh	KD.—Kildare	Q.—Queen's
CL.—Carlow	Kk.—Kilkenny	R.—Roscommon
Cav.—Cavan	Kg.—King's	S.—Sligo
Clare.—Clare	Lm.—Leitrim	T.—Tipperary
Ck.—Cork	Lim.—Limerick	TO.—Tyrone
DG.—Donegal	LD.—Londonderry	Wat.—Waterford
Dn.—Down	LF.—Longford	WM.—West Meath
D.—Dublin	Lo.—Louth	Wex.—Wexford
F.—Fermanagh	Mo.—Mayo	W.—Wicklow.
G.—Galway	EM.—Meath

These County names are those of the "colonial" period, which was the period of the Down Survey maps. In our days, the list would have to be altered as follows :

Lx.—Leix (instead of Queen's)
O.—Offaly (- - King's)
TC.—Tirconnel (- - Donegal).

N.B.—I, J are considered as one letter.
U, V are considered as one letter.
Kil-, Kill-, are abbreviated in the same way : K.

Indeed, in Petty's maps, both spellings are indifferently used for a same name. According to the modern rule, Kil- is the spelling before a consonant and Kill- before a vowel. So no mistake can result on account of using the same abbreviation for both.

par.—parish.
bar., B.—barony.
Co.—County.

[1] It will be noticed that the initials of the provinces have not been used to avoid confusion (which explains for instance why Meath is represented by EM (East Meath). For most of the names made of two terms, either in Irish or in English, the symbol is composed of the initials of both : AM, LD, etc.

A few names in the " townland index " are not regular townlands, but place-names of divers sorts, such as : Manggerton top, Mizen head, Nauangatte, Wicklow (the towne of), etc.

When many key-words begin with the same term, this term is abridged to an initial in order to facilitate printing, as, for instance, " C." for " Corne-." But it happens that in such a series, the alphabetical order inserts names beginning with letters identical to the abridged term, without being this term itself. So it must be kept in mind that the abridgments do not necessarily stand for the first term of a name but are sometimes simply a group of letters.

A.CRENY*, B. Kinnatalloon, Ck. (Aghern).
A.DEO, B. Magunihy, K. (A.doe).

1 Feale, a river. The spelling with d probably results from a confusion with the English "field."
2 Cf modern form Owney in Owneybeg. V. Noms de lieux irl., pp. 68 & 75.—"In order to make the name the same as that of a well-known watering-place in England, the proprietors (of the monastery site) twisted the native Abbey-Owney into Abington." (JOYCE, III, 23).
3 V. Noms de lieux irl., p. 68.
4 BN & HD have retained a spelling in harmony with the etymology. (sruth, srothair). Cf Abbeyshrule.
5 Irish Leamhnachta (KEATING, II, 316, and cf geographical notice in d², IV, 332). S. in Slunagh might be the final s of Inis prefixed to the second term by a scribe ignorant of the Irish language (Cf. OS map: Coole Abbey). V. infra: Inisleonaghty, a par. where, according to BN, are the townlands of Little Abby, Monkstown, Monksgrange, the names of which show they were parts of the lands of an abbey.
6 This is the mistake of an engraver who has combined in this cacography the names of two adjoining parishes: Acha & Arnie.
7 Airthear maige (OG), eastern plain; a confusion with words whose first term is ard.
8 Notice the chauge of gh to f.

A.DERIG, A.derrig,[9] B. Lower Iveagh, B. Upper Iveagh, Dn. (A.derg).
A.DOWEY*, B. Coleraine, LD. (A.dowey).

BANNOGH, -nagh, B. Crannagh, Kk. (Odagh).[19]

15 Baile essa dara, Baile Easa-dara (OG). Cf. two explanations in J. (I, 460): "the town of the cataract of the oak" and "the town of Dara's cataract".

16 This BN form with an l is also used for the tld in HD: it is a transcription of Baile e(a)sa caoile, the town of the narrow cataract (cf. J., I. 51) with change of l to r, a mistake frequently made by English scribes. This corruption begins to appear in HD though it is not constant. OG: "baile esa caoile. . . .now Ballysokeery, B. Tirawley, Co. Mayo. Cf. d°: "baile essa caerach (the town of the cascade of the sheep), Ballysakeery, B. Tirawley, Co. Mayo)"

17 Now par. B.more Eustace, bar. Naas, KD.

18 A par. situated where the counties Dublin, Kildare and W. Meath meet; it spread on these three counties. The portion which is now in Wicklow Co. (bar. Talbotstown, Lr.) is named from one of its tlds: Crehelp (BN, The Cree-helps; HD, Thecrehelpe).

19 Ban O nDuach, green field of the O'Duaghs (J., III, 527). This family name is in BN: "The Territory of Edogh," q.v., and is also to be found now in the name of Bannogh (par.) which is in GTI Odagh. The large territory of Ui Duach is still mentioned in an Inquisition of 1635 (OG), when there was already a bar. Fassadinin; there were 22 par. in the deanery of Ui Duach: the whole of bar. Fassadinin and portions of bar. Galmoy and Crannagh, Kk, and Clarmallagh, Q.

20 Baile an rideri (OG), the town of the knight.
21 Bothach ui fhialáin (OG). "Boho, . . ,is only a part of its name as given by the Four Masters, viz, the Both or tents of Muinir Fialain." (J., I, 305).—Cf. Booha (BN), Boha (HD) whose spellings are an intermediate stage preparing the modern transcription Boho. Cf. also Bohologh.
22 In BN, the tld is Beghy.
23 BN, tlds Bishopscourt and K.carragh; HD, tld K.carnagh.
24 The form Blank- (with a k) is only found in the par. name in BN. The second term is always -feild- or -feile- (never -ville-) in BN & HD. The third term (in the tlds as well as in the par. names) is -towne in BN and HD, except for one townland spelt Blanchfeildskill in BN. There is also a tld Blanchfeilesparke (BN), -feildspark (HD), in par. K.macahill. In GTI all the tlds are spelt -ville, with two exceptions: Blanchfields bog and Blanchfieldland.
25 Tld Bogho-Elagh; OG, Boty thola.
26 Probably a part of par. Buolick, a par. which is now entirely in Slievardagh bar. On its site, there is in HD the tld Crosnogran.
27 The scribe of BN omitted the first term in the name of the par., but the engraver of HD has written the name of the tld: Monebelloge.
28 The r is always found in HD; tlds Brackloge, -lowna.
29 Tld Brehagh. OG, bréch mag.

2 HD, tld Castledelan.
3 The tld Castlesallagh is now in par. Donaghmore.
4 The only instance in BN and HD of the form Castro-. Perhaps there is some connection between this latin form and the following curious explanation of Castleventry by JOYCE: "Its Irish name (of Castleventry) is Caislean-na-gaeithe, the Castle of the wind, which has been made Castleventry, as if Ventry had some connection in meaning with ventus." (I, 36). The same author explains Ventry by fionn-traigh, Fintra, and mentions "a beautiful white strand." (I, 445).

1 Tld: BN, Laurachor; HD, Lauracar; OG, Lathrach-coire. "Laracor near Trim in Meath, once the residence of Dean Swift, is called in an Inq. of Jac. I, Laraghcorre, which points to the original Irish form Lathrach, -cora, the site of the weir." (J. I. 310).
2 Laroy is an engraver's mistake; s, instead of the modern r, is the constant spelling in the maps.
3 OG, liath muine. This BN spelling with f is still used in Leaflony, S. and Cloghleafin, Ck.
4 G11, Lough Hill, a tld at the junction of the contiguous par. of Abbeyleix, Attenagh and Rosconnell, which spread over the three.
5 Now this "town" of 419 inhabitants "may be looked on as a suburb of Strabane, on the opposite (Tyrone) side of the river (Foyle)". (FLETCHER, Ulster, p. 34).
6 Liath-manchain, grey [land] of St Manchan (F.M., quoted by JOYCE, III, 468). Notice in NB the confusion of the first term with Lis-.

[2] In the same BN map is also the spelling: Shanereheene.
[3] Shart-, Isart- for Disert-. (Cf. supra Iserkieran). For the second term, v. in OG: Tech mundu, Tech munnu.
[4] V. supra Abbeyshrule.
[5] "Srath"; in BN and HD the insertion of t between s and r at the beginning of the Irish words was not yet the rule. Cf. supra Abby Shrory.
[6] Suidhe-an-roin (OG); the anglicised form is an attempt to give the pronunciation seemione. (J., I, 321).
[7] BN, tld Sirkirane (churchland); the unique instance of the modern anglicised form of the first syllable. OG, saiger chiarain.
[8] The n is only in BN; probably a scribe's mistake, under the influence of the numerous place-names beginning by Str-, a corruption of the Ir. sr.
[9] OG, Sodain. The BN spelling seems to confirm Joyce's hypothesis that Siddan is a corrupted form for Sodan. (J., III, 555).

1 The same as Taghashynny, q.v.
2 There is in BN a tld Newtowne Stolaban. The s (which is prefixed also in HD) is another instance of the Leinster tendency to prefix an S- to the place-names beginning by Ta-.
3 OG, Laithrech briuin alias Láthrach briuin. It seems as if HD had repeated a mistake of the scribe's and from this mistake a second one would have arisen: Latta- altered to tulla-, the first term of many place-names.
4 Tld: BN and HD, Tamlahard. Cf. supra Magherehoulet and infra Tawlaghkittey, Templefynnlagan and Towlagochrill.
5 Taragh is the transcription of the full genitive form teamhrach, from teamhair, which—having lost its final gh—is the root of the modern anglicised form.
6 Tld: BN, Tawlett; HD, Taulett.
